Editor's Note

I was gone for a stint and I hope it all went swimmingly.

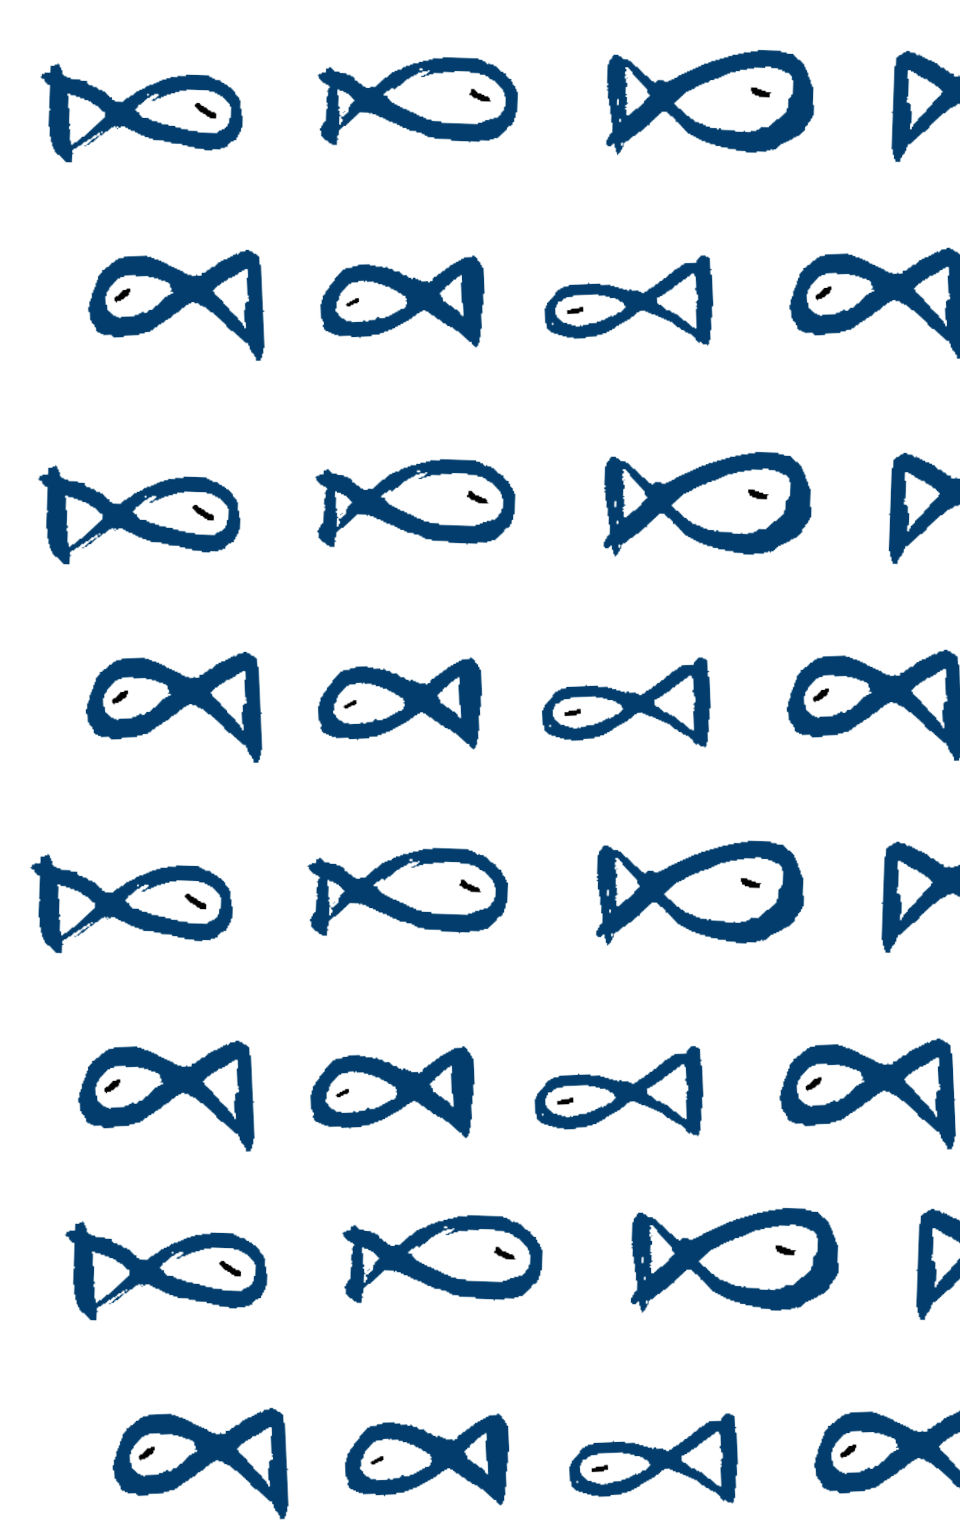

The last volume was a bit of a mess but it was our mess and it was beautiful. This volume has fewer of my colors and more of yours, which is, I believe, a good thing.

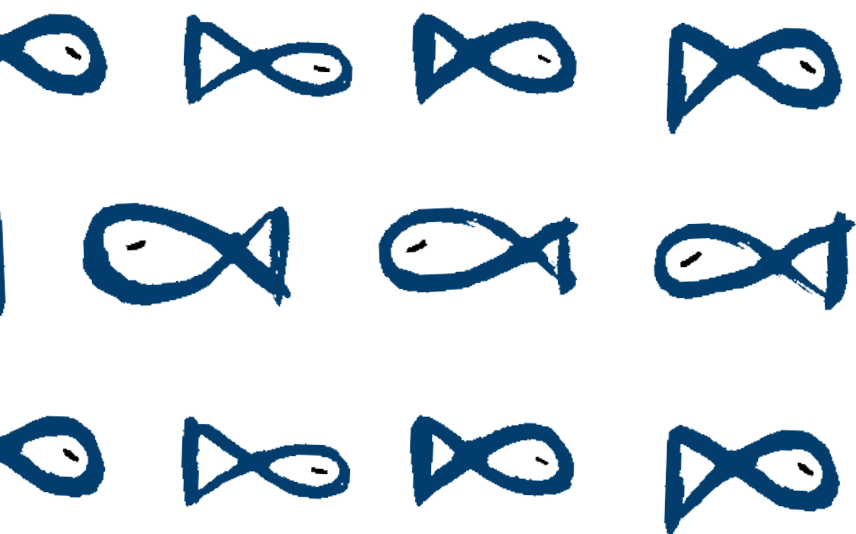

As with all good stories, this book has a beginning, a middle, and an end. As with all good creatures, there is no one way to read it. As with all good foods, there is no one way to eat it. You may do as you please with the things that are yours. But this is ours, so I request that you love it. And if you cannot love it, at least care for it, because that is the kind thing to do.

Keep reading and seeding and running and sunning. Be rhyming and baffling and even be laughling. If you must be moping, then always be hoping for

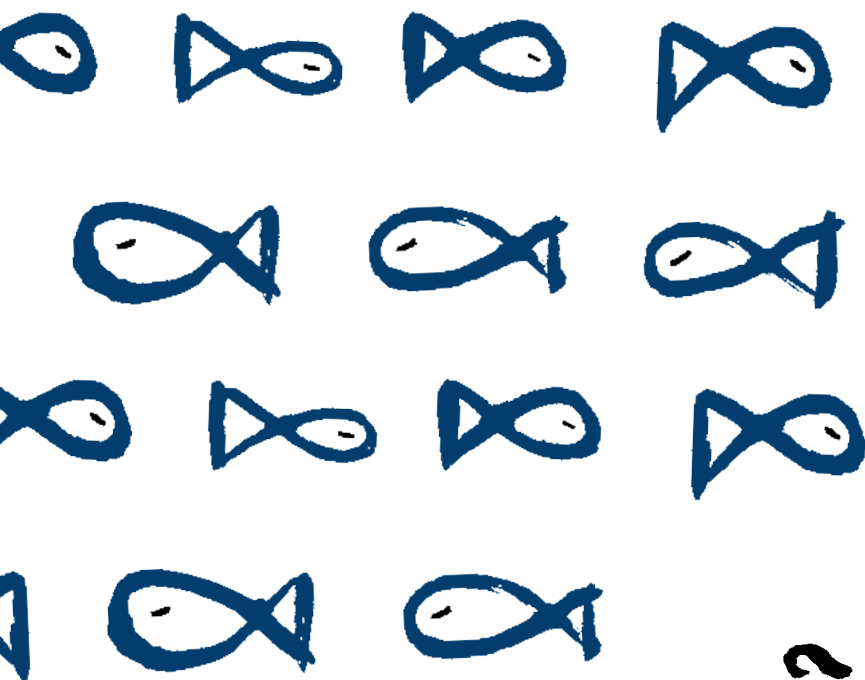

Love and all the best we can do,

Kavya

(The Sweet Beginning)

Newspaper Ad: Looking for Full Time Employment as a House Elf

by Sarah Thau

I will sit on your shelf and be quiet Unless you want me not to
And then I will sing very nicely

Spoonerisms

by Jack Bourdeaux

Tick as a noun
Not as a clock
Not as a frown
But just as a bug
In the grass that's gone brown

Nick as a town
Calling his friends
Saying hey I'll come down
I'm the king of this city
I'll wear the crown

Rosemary's Ponytail

by Ally Dubinsky

Poor little Rosemary, her hair is on fire, but at least she is ascending, She was handed an olive, lost in heaven, and was told to plant it in the ground.

the olive evaporated her hands empty oliveless

Now she is tired.

a voice of angels:
Dream a little dream like you

i am little
i can dream a little dream

Poor little Rosemary, her hair was on fire, she ascended to Heaven, the saints embraced her, but she left oliveless and sleepy

The Strawberries of the Sea

A Picture Book
by Toby Chan

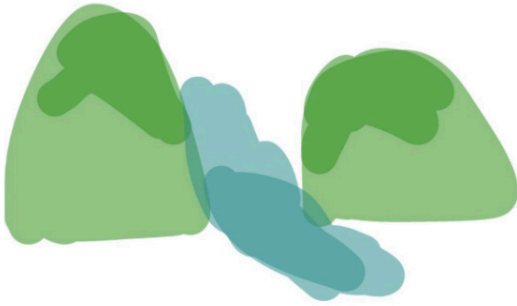

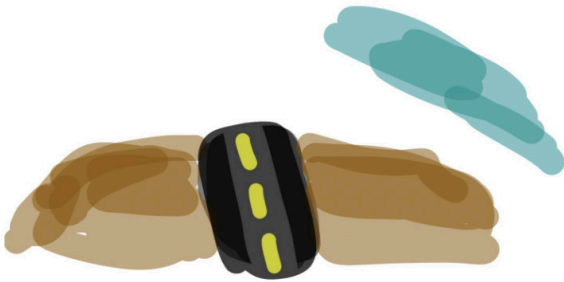

There was once a young man in a small town

He set out looking for an adventure

He travelled through hills and valleys

Crossed rivers and roads

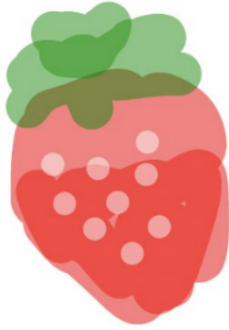

Finally he reached a little hut by the sea

Where a ragged old man came out

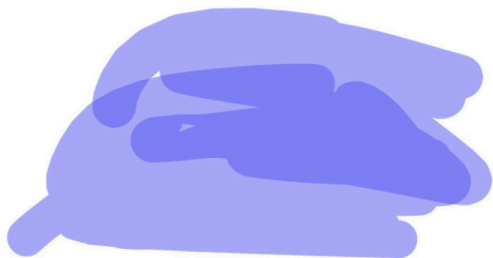

The man said, “Son, have you tasted a strawberry of the sea?”

He shook his head no—he’d never heard of such a thing

“There’s a patch of it beyond what the eye can see,” the old man said.

And he pointed at the canoe docked at the beach

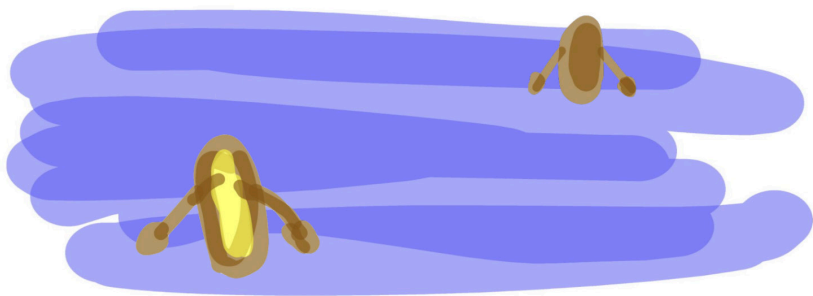

The young man was up for a challenge

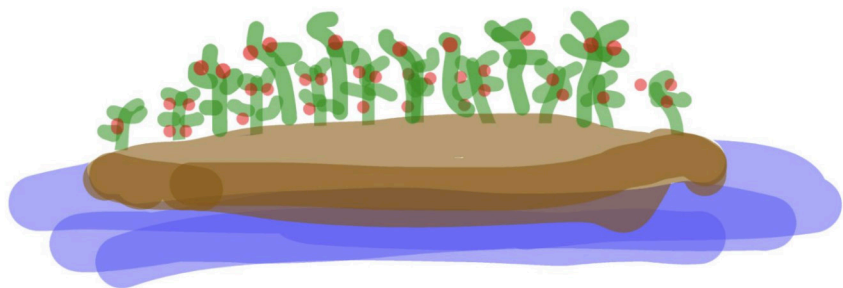

All day he rowed...

And rowed...

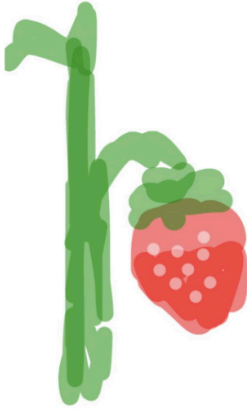

And rowed....

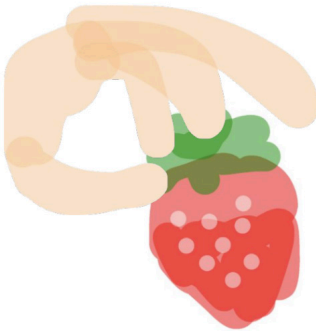

And then he saw it

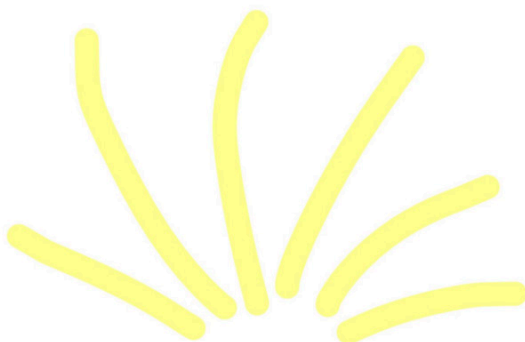

Gently he bent down

And plucked one

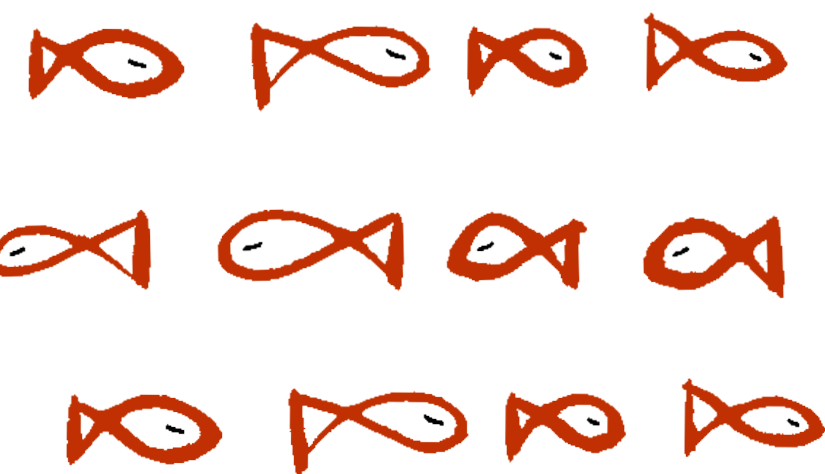

And tasted it...

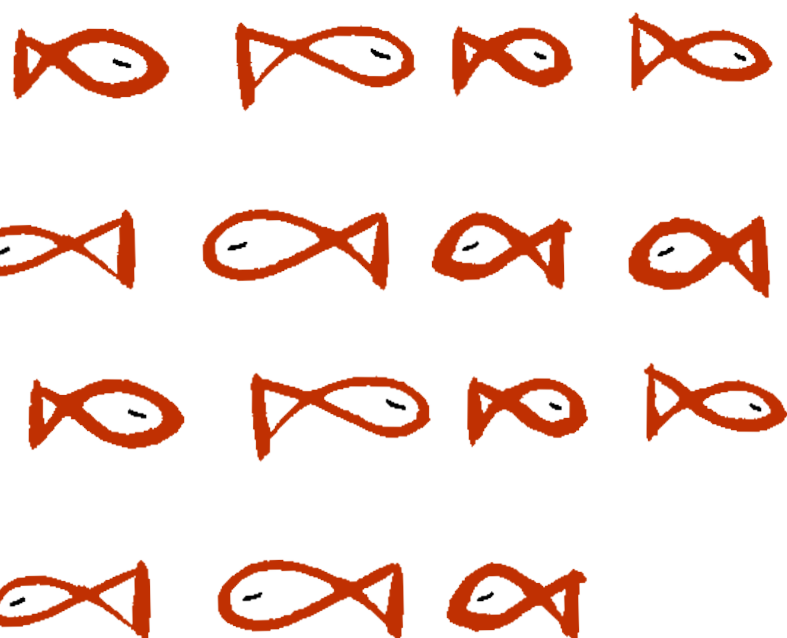

And it was the best strawberry he had ever tasted.

Chapter 2 (The Weird Middle)

[[MOVING PROCESS]]

Billy Johnson

The Thing IS Living From the Box

which is to say recognizing our necessary limitations because they are our guidelines for how to do being

MOVING IN

I'm lucky because I have my starting point. MOVE IN.

At least one thing that I know I need to be doing: ART

From a place of NEED TO COMMUNICATE

I'm already way inside my head, I've been here

[I'll continue to be here] [I think you need art too]

BEING ALONE is not being alive #Fichte #Sondheim

So, I look to ART as my term for truthful communication

Still, WHAT to DO?

Again, what CAN I do?

ART making is bound by material, just as all communication:

Language and terms are material historical CONSTRAINTS

Material Reqs: [manipulable, accessible, durable, mobile, present, strong enough, approachable, slow, potential...]

Cardboard WORKS as the primary material of our contemporary moving (he claims) process

OPACITY, REFLECTION, [TRANSMISSION?] FULL BOUNDARY

Things that happen

[Reciprocal reflecting relation of change through inhabitation of the built (ing) environment] Noticing : [RE] cognizing

Noticing intentional and unintentional material physically manifest changes

THINGS FALL

Accumulation of potential material

Accumulation of fabricated material

Accumulation of living materials [MESS]

PRESENTATION (sometimes I host others)

[[WHAT WAS I DOING?]]

Things that need to happen (in response?) [CONTINUALLY]

MAKE SPACE

Clean your room. MAINTENANCE WORK

PRESENTATION

Clean your room. ART WORK [EYE WORK]

LIVING WITH

This is the very important NEGOTIATION OF COMFORT

[RE]PRESENTATION

Apparently, I have to make this all meaningful...

MOVE OUT

Ultimately, this is hardly a discrete part, this is all the MOVING PROCESS

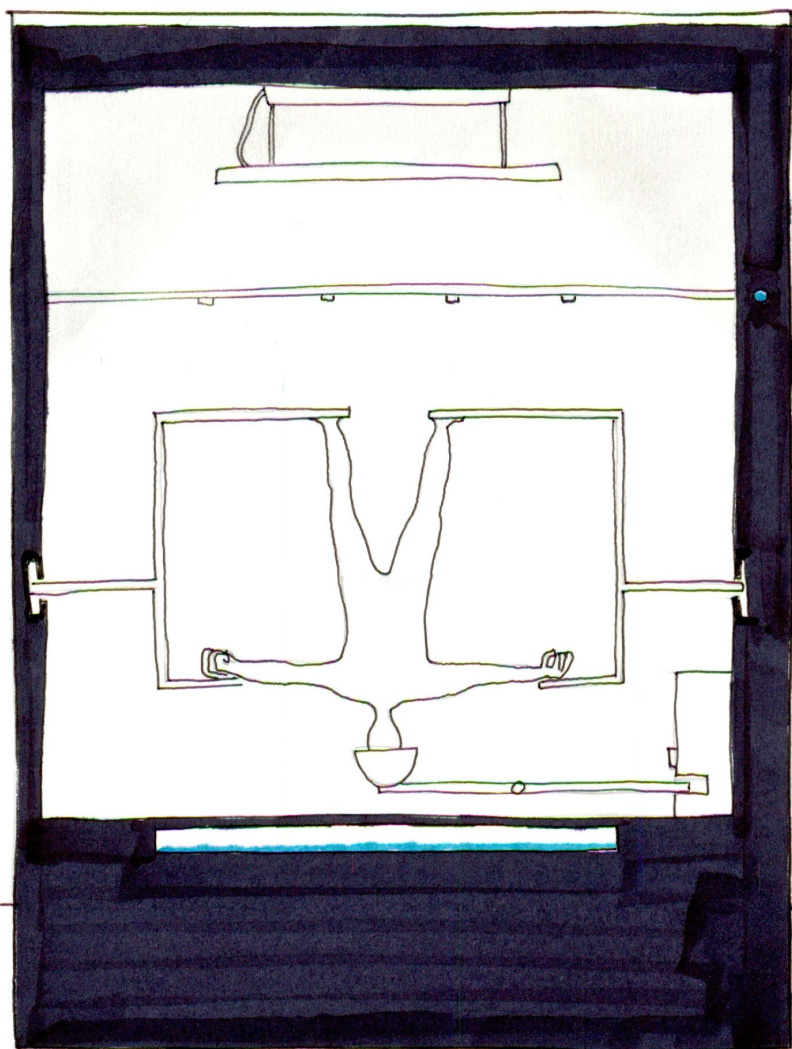

MOVE ON

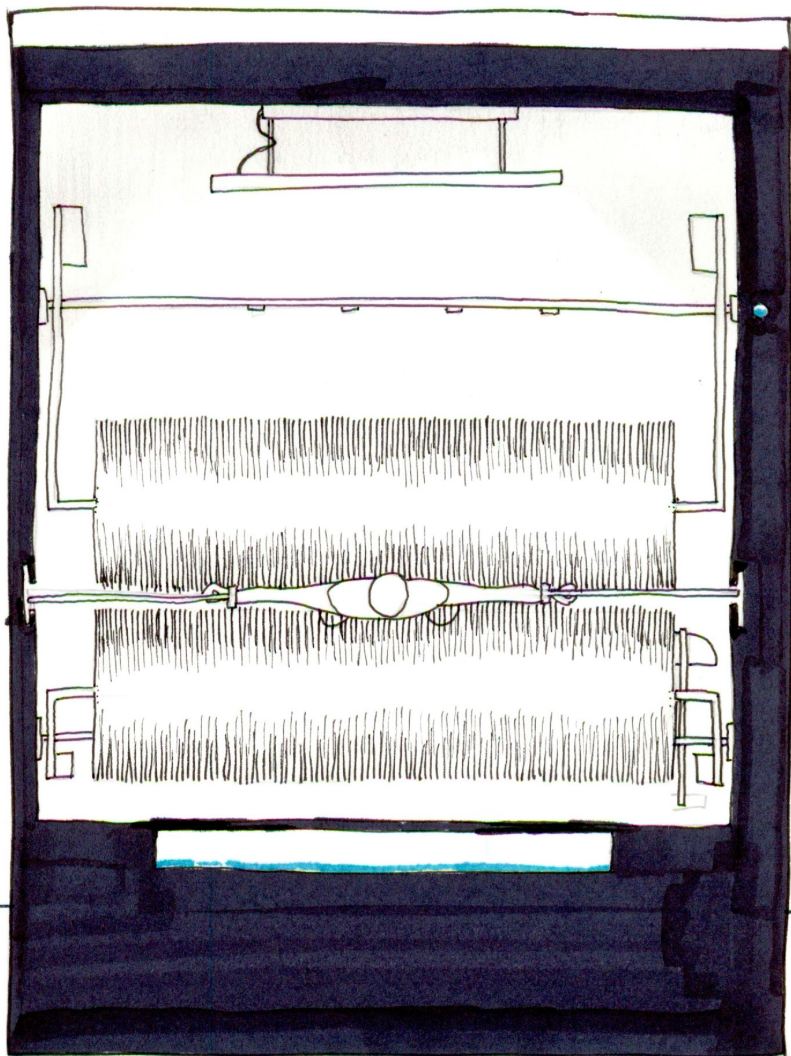

LIVE [moving in is moving out is moving through is moving on]

Be it resolved that, on this day—the first of today—we shall hereby be known as the Committee of the Board of Five.

Be it resolved that Mr. Broom is appointed the Vice Committee Chairman of the Board of Five.

Be it resolved that Ms. Mom's Decorative Couch Pillow is appointed the Principal Committee Councilor of the Board of Five.

Be it resolved that Sir Ceramic Plate of Taiwan is appointed the Sargeant at Arms of the Committee of the Board of Five.

Be it resolved that Dr. Marten is appointed the Interim Secretary's Assistant of the Committee of the Board of Five.

Be it resolved that the “five second rule” shall be modified and codified as the “six second rule” for betterment of preserving rations.

Be it resolved that crumbs too small to identify shall be granted amnesty and consumed regardless.

Be it resolved that tea made from boiled dust is still considered tea.

Be it resolved that any remaining chocolate is to be worshipped before being eaten.

Be it resolved that whomsoever finds Waldo is responsible for untaping him and re-hiding him in the book so that the next patron may enjoy such a stimulating hunt—and keep his skills of perception honed.

Be it resolved that dreams count as alternate minutes and must be reported upon waking.

Be it resolved that any memory older than a month must undergo verification, by comparing it with the version told yesterday.

Be it resolved that hope, when encountered, must be quarantined for observation.

Be it resolved that no one shall mention the sun unless it actually appears, which is unlikely but theoretically possible.

Be it resolved that one hour without lights—be it intentional or not—shall indicate the commencement of the day.

Be it resolved that one hour is determined such that it makes intuitive sense and passes a simple majority of the Committee of the Board of Five concurring that one hour has passed.

Be it resolved that each day, one hour is spent attempting to repair the radio and any materials deemed necessary for repair, from any object, are subject to reclamation for the purpose of fixing said radio.

Be it resolved that one additional hour should be spent scanning channels and attempting communication as it is not guaranteed that the radio will show clear indication of proper function.

Be it resolved that the Committee Chairman of the Board of Five's brother should be made the top priority for contact. He's out there. I know he is. He lives on a farm in Virginia. His farm is quiet, self-contained, and filled with drawers of batteries. I know he has a working radio and I want to let him know I am okay. We can make a plan. I know he will think of a way.

Be it resolved that—today, this first today—five seconds, six seconds, broom, Waldo, brother, hour, hour, hour without Virginia—

Bobbing for Apples

JJ Robeck

John and Lorena (Bob)(bit)t used to come to this wood to bob for apples. They would do it in pure darkness, unless they had arrived at just the right time for the moon to melt into milk in the wading pool where us trees would drop the fruit. This was the only light they could see when they loped, hand in hand, into the wood, the soles of their shoes smelling of rose water (and blood). Look how the moon swims in the ripples, like a cloud or a gleaming petri dish (awaiting a tissue sample) or a bowl of (freshly-squeezed) milk with no cereal in it. For a cat or maybe a misanthrope. So the cat and the misanthrope sank their teeth into unknown flesh bobbing on the surface of the water, laughing to themselves as they juggled what they thought were apples, saying Honey sweetheart isn't this game more fun when you can't see a thing? saying Honey sweetheart can you bake me a pie?

Mr. and Mrs. Bobbitt had a picnic once by the pool. At that point they had come bobbing for apples enough to bake three pies, and after laying down their blanket on a flattened patch of ground once brimming with poppies (Mrs. Bobbitt had picked one to put in her hair and let the Mr. crush the rest into a paste under his boot) they broke out their finest china and cutlery and began to eat. The liquid moon found the sheen of the silver of their forks each time they wiped them clean with their lips. Bite by bite each pie was gone and still they were left wondering what that strange taste in the back of their mouths was. But the moon knew and listened to them saying Honey sweetheart I think I can taste the foil it's like steel on my tongue saying Honey sweetheart I think you may have left some eggshells in there saying Honey sweetheart you've done it again saying Honey saying Woman can't you even crack an egg?

When they finished their eggshell pies, teeth full of dust and grit as if they would leave our grove in peace for a good while, before once more they grew hungry for unknown flesh. But it was not just them feasting on us. Forests grow hungry when the sun escapes our maw. So each night we feast on those who stumble into this blue world unwinding. Blind or drunk or both in the mystery of night, so desperate to be complete, so enamored by the moon in its oceanic domain that they trip over branches, are stripped of their skin and bones and hearts all just to bob for apples or to bake a pie.

The last time they came bobbing for apples, Mrs. Bobbitt told her husband she wanted to prepare the apples for the pie in the clearing. So she brought a cutting board and an eight-inch kitchen knife with her. The moon and us trees then went to sleep. We gave the Mrs. the clearing for that night, looked away as sliced some apples and when she left her footsteps refused to accede to the mud.

When the sun rose we found Mr. Bobbitt in bits and bobs in the bobbing pool, swimming gruesomely in blood and crystal. His eyes stared up at us, the two still connected by sinew and nerves like a pair of bolas like veiny red balls, lidless and frozen in surprise. And there in the water swam other bits and bobs, apples so you could call them, hot and round and red and the pieces of travelers just like them. Who had come for a pie. Who had come to smile in darkness not knowing whose hand they were holding.

So this day we will adorn our boughs with the bits and bobs of Mr. Bobbitt, and when the moon rises and the pool fills with milk, we will drop our fruit into the water. And in this way we will feed the hungry. We will pick eyes like apples from ourselves the trees so that the vagrants of this are spared that horror. So that they are fed. So that they will come back for a pie and eat themselves away.

My Nightstand Poem

by Kavya Krishnamurthy

eyes that blink
and feet that stink
and questions that make you regret she can think hair in her armpits her legs and her toes
a drawer stuffed with socks and freshly washed clothes books she won't read and a bed unmade
and perfume on the shelf where it lives in the shade and pencils and hundreds and hundreds of cups
and hundreds and hundreds
and hundreds of cups

Balthasar's Message

You are what you eat
cried old Balthasar
he fled in retreat
but didn't get far carried by feet fueled by a bizarre diet of beet
cold rabbit and tar admitting defeat
you eat what you are

The Problem

I want to explore with you Feel the minutiae of the world
Taste and smell, sense every sense
Past sense, with you

I want to live every experience
And I'd ask you right now to join me
